AS A WOMAN SEES IT

Rheta Childe Dorr

With a laudable desire to know more about the inner workings of the child mind, educators have from time to time made studies of the ideals cherished by selected groups of children. The first study of this kind was made by Estelle M. Darrah in 1898 from 1,400 children in California and Minnesota. Since then children's ideals have been studied in several states of the Union, in England and in Germany.

The latest study of this kind was made in Missoula, Mont., and its results—in many respects similar to those obtained in Tennessee, England, Germany and California—are published in the current number of the "Educational Review." Twelve hundred children in the elementary schools of Missoula were examined, two questions being asked them, viz.: (1) Which person among those you have seen or thought of, or heard of, or read about would you most like to resemble? (2) Why?

The Montana University man who conducted the inquiry expresses himself as being somewhat alarmed at the results as far as the girls are concerned. Fewer girls wanted to be like their mothers than boys wanted to be like their fathers. In fact, the Montana children, except the smallest, did not seem to resemble their parents at all; this in glaring contrast to the German children, more than fifty per cent of whom expressed that preference.

The girls in Missoula did not want to be like their teachers, either. Thirty-seven per cent of all the girls wanted to be like some male hero. Of the girls thirteen years old, more than fifty-three per cent had masculine ideals. After that age the number sharply declined.

The explanation given is that the male ideal is the only one school children ever get. From the kindergarten, girls as well as boys are told of the greatness of Washington, Lincoln, Columbus, Shakespeare. Long dead soldiers, statesmen, authors are held up as models of conduct, and the children get the idea that there are no women worthy of emulation. The schools, the author admits, are too much planned for boys.

The thing that most disconcerted the Montana examiners was the unwillingness of the girls to look forward to purely domestic lives. "Fewer girls than one would look for desired only to be home builders," says the report, and only one child voiced her desire to have babies. Many had come to the conclusion that children were nuisances.

So they are when you are a girl and have to take care of brothers and sisters when you long to play. The girls of Missoula, Mont., who want to be something positive and strong and independent, instead of domestic workers, are to be congratulated. Most of them will grow up to be happy, contented wives and mothers, but in their youth they dare to dream big dreams.

NOTICE TO STOCKHOLDERS.

This well known citizen tells a Nerv-Worth story in the following statement that should cause the most skeptical to want to give this world's greatest nerve tonic a chance to overcome their bodily ills:

Burke's Drug Store—I have had St. Vitus' dance for over two years and I was in an awful nervous condition and my stomach also was in bad shape and my head ached a great deal.

I have doctor'd with doctors but no results. I have taken two bottles of Nerv-Worth and my condition is wonderfully improved. I feel like a new man.
